

SMALL GROUPS WELCOME FIRST-TIMERS

Ever thought it might be fun to try a small group if only you could find the right one for you? Several groups have invited people not currently in a small group to join them for the all-church IMAGINE Devotional series. We asked some of these folks about their experiences with a CPC small group for the first time.

Mark and Kim Zasso

"We recently relocated to Danville, and have been attending CPC a couple of months. It's easy to be anonymous when you're new in town, and we wanted to get to know people. We also wanted to discover what the Lord had planned for CPC through the Imagine campaign, so we signed up for a small group and were contacted by Lee and Diane Camp to try their group. The couples in our group have made us feel welcome by sharing about their ministries and community outreach, and by keeping in touch regularly and praying for us."

Jen Bradley

"I'm new to the area and didn't know anyone at church. I responded to the Small Groups announcement in services and signed up for Sean and Tammy Maxwell's home group. I've really felt welcome in my group and have begun to see God working as we share our testimonies of what He's doing in our lives each week."

Ted Christianson

"To paraphrase Groucho Marx:

'I never thought I'd find a small group that would have me as a member.'"

"Kidding aside, a couple of friends invited me to try their group and it's even better than I expected."

Joe & Connie Anderson

"We just joined CPC and heard about small groups in the new member class. In our group we've found that we share a common goal – we're all searching for ways to be more Christ-like. People need others to grow in their faith and also, the sharing of experiences gives us special insight into challenges we're facing."
